

For over a decade, from the late 1960s to the mid-1970s, at the height of the Cold War, professionals from the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. worked in partnership on the eradication of smallpox, a joint project that became one of the few success stories in that era. Interested in learning more about this collaboration?

Speaker

Kerri Cossean '11

Sunday, February 16th at 7:30 p.m.

Seegers Union, Room 111

Refreshments will be served

All are welcome!

Kerri Cossean graduated Cum Laude from Muhlenberg College in 2011 with a double major in History and Russian Studies. She decided to continue her education at Florida International University. In Spring 2013 Kerri was chosen to intern in the Executive Office at the US Embassy in Moscow, Russia, where she worked alongside American Ambassador Michael McFaul. She currently is an intern at Southern Command, an integral part of the Department of Defense in Doral, Florida. Kerri will graduate this May with a Master's degree in History. She is interested in working for the U.S. government.

Sponsored by:

Department of Languages, Literatures and Cultures
Russian Studies Program, Department of History
Office of the Dean of the College for Academic Life

MUHLENBERG
COLLEGE